Workshop on 31 January 2020

The canton of Geneva pursues a model of separation of state and church (since 1907) and has reaffirmed it in 2012 with a constitutional revision. After years of negotiation, Geneva's populace has said yes to the new secularism law in February of 2019. Yet renewed resistance has already been announced in front of Geneva's constitutional court. Limiting the law only to its ban on wearing religious symbols for state officials is unjust, as the law also aims at preserving religious peace and the freedom of religion and belief. What is this new secularism law in the canton of Geneva about?

The workshop aims at taking a closer look at the backgrounds and impacts of the law from the perspective of different disciplines. How did the need for a secularism law arise and what are the origins of the law? How is the voted-upon text of the law constructed and what traces have the years of negotiations left in the text? What are potential and already recognizable effects of the law on majority and minority populations? Should the 'pacte laïque' be assessed as secular, religiously-neutral, anti-religious or differently? And how can such categories be handled with care to facilitate peaceful living together between the religious and non-religious? At the heart of the workshop are an epistemic interest in the context and the search for practicable interdisciplinarity.
