

How radical right-wing populism deals with demographic challenges. An international workshop

Organization

Oscar Mazzoleni, Emilia Meini, Antoine Lehmann (Université de Lausanne)

Friday September 29th to Saturday, September 30th 2023 - Géopolis - Rooms 2224 GEO and 2230 GEO

On September 29th and 30th, the University of Lausanne will be hosting an international research workshop on the theme of right-wing populism and demographic issues. The workshop, linked to the SNSF-WAVE project "Populism and conspiracy theory", aims to examine how immigration, the defence of the Christian religion, the traditional family and the birth rate are all part of the radical right-wing agenda. The focus will be on three continents (Europe, North and South America).

In the last decades, new or radicalized actors have become electorally and politically successful in many contemporary democracies. Such as actors have been often included in the “family” of the radical right-wing populism. These actors – leader, movements and parties - have put migrants and immigration at the core of its agenda and narrative across continents. In fact, immigrants’ flows, mainly from the poorer to the richer countries, have opened a wide and persistent political opportunity for radical right-wing populism.

However, immigration is not the sole issue of this ideological “family” and migration flows are not the unique structural opportunity framed and exploited by radical right-wing populism. Nowadays new issues take increasing relevance in relation of structural, social and cultural transformations, such as the attack against “gender ideologies”, abortion, LGBTQ rights, Islamophobia etc. However, academic literature has often considered these plural set of issues as separated research topics.

The depenalization of abortion, recognition of same sex marriage, fluid sexuality etc. are framed by radical right-wing populism as the causes of the crisis of the traditional family model. Immigration from non-European/non-Christian countries is seen both a threat for the nation and prosperity, but also a danger for the Christian/Western/traditional family’s model. At the same time, the defence of traditional family model is presented as a crucial response against demographic threats undermining the “true” people (e. g. declining birth rates, decreasing shares of Christians and white people, etc.).

The workshop deals with a redefinition and a dramatization of the “cultural backlash” by radical right-wing populism on demographic-related issues in many democracies, in Europe and Americas. Right-wing populism ideologically politicizes and takes advantage from official projections which foreseen, for instance, a significant decreasing of the EU residents in the next decades. The main official explanation of EU demographic decline is the lowering of birth-rates and the growth of aging population. For the US, the demographic decline mainly refers to the non-Hispanic white population. In Brazil, population projections also expect a decreasing trend after 2050 and the decreasing proportion of white population.

The workshop will address the following main research question:

How/to what extent the current radical right-wing populist agenda/issues/ideological stances might be interpreted as responses to key demographic challenges, connected to changes in gender, sexual relations, and family's models?

The workshop pursues the following goals:

- Connecting scholars interested in studying radical right-wing populism but working in different and often separate topics/sub-fields (immigration, gender, family-related issues, religion etc.);
- Highlighting the diversity of demographic-related issues framed by radical right-wing populism in different contexts, assuming each actor (i.e. leader, movement, party) shape and frame demographic challenges in different ways;
- Developing and sharing a theoretical discussion on radical-right-wing populism and demographic populism;
- Drawing a collective and cohesive project of edited book.

Friday 29th September 2023

Géopolis, Room 2224

09:00-09:30 Introduction

09:30-10:15

Michał Krzyżanowski, Uppsala University, Sweden, Natalia Krzyżanowska, Örebro University, Sweden, Monica Colombo, University Milano-Bicocca, Italy

Re/Definitions of the 'Family' in/and the Discourse of European Right Wing Populist Parties: Strategies of Pre-Legitimising and Normalising the Politics of Exclusion

Discussant: Marianna Griffini

10:15-11:00

Carlos de la Torre, University of Florida

Comparing the racial and gender projects of right and left populists in Latin America

Discussant: Javier Corrales

Coffee break

11:15-12:00

Carol Mason, University of Kentucky

Opposing Abortion, Protecting Women, and Transnationalizing US Populism

Discussant: Mattia Diletti

12:00-12:45

Javier Corrales, Amherst College

Polarization, Policy Extremism, and Homophobia under Populist Governments

Discussant: Carol Mason

Lunch break

14:15-15:00

Alberta Giorgi, University of Bergamo, Italy

Grounding anti-immigration and pro-traditional family values on science

Discussant: Michał Krzyżanowski

15:00-15:45

Marianna Griffini, King's College London

Demographic entanglements: colonial reflections in the discourse and policy of the populist radical right on natality

Discussant: Juliana Chueri

Coffee break

16:00-16.45

Oscar Mazzoleni and Emilia Meini, University of Lausanne

The Challenge of conspirational right-wing populism. The Great Replacement in Western Europe

Discussant: Reinhard Heinisch

Saturday 30th September 2023

Géopolis, Room 2230

9:30-10:15

Juliana Chueri, University of Amsterdam

Bolsonaro's Gender Politics: Social Policies and Attitudes Among Female Supporters

Discussant: Alberta Giorgi

10:15-11:00

Reinhard Heinisch and Diana Lucia Hofmann, University of Salzburg

The Effects of Othering: Anti-Islamic Mobilization in Austria

Discussant: Oscar Mazzoleni

Coffee break

11:15-12:00

Mattia Diletti, University La Sapienza

Transatlantic nostalgia. Traditional family and global conservative networks

Discussant: Carlos de la Torre

12:00-12.45

Final remarks

14.30-15:30

Civis Meeting

This event is organized with the support of :

Fonds national suisse

Unil

UNIL | Université de Lausanne

Institut d'études politiques
(IEP)

Unil

UNIL | Université de Lausanne

Observatoire de la vie
politique régionale (OVPR)