Student activism for social justice: Concept and Translocality

Professor Thierry M. Luescher, Strategic Lead: Equitable Education, Human Sciences Research Council (HSRC), South Africa & Adjunct Professor: Critical Studies in Higher Education Transformation, Nelson Mandela University (NMU), South Africa

Dr Keamogetse G. Morwe, Senior Lecturer: Department of Youth in Development, University of Venda (Univen), South Africa

Professor Gritt Nielsen, Department of Educational Anthropology, Danish School of Education, Aarhus University (AU), Denmark

Discussant: all participants

The emphasis in this seminar is on sharing experiences and analyses of contemporary student activism in a translocal setting. For this purpose, we start by reviewing some conceptual tools available to the study of student activism, including the concepts of student activism, student movements, translocality and translocal articulations, as well as their varied application in recent studies (especially in the Danish and South African contexts). The objective is to establish a common conceptual language for an in-seminar discussion of present-day examples of student activism for social justice. Seminar participants (locally from the University of Lausanne, as well as via online platforms from Denmark and South Africa) are invited to actively share their observations, personal experiences, and analyses of recent and ongoing student activism, including, for example, in the recent pro-Palestinian student encampments.
